Tonight, they had the American Club dinner postponed from Washington's birthday and gave it in my honor at the Hotel George V. Messrs. Faure, Pleven, Robert Schuman, Maurice Schumann, Prefect Haag, Wilfrid Baumgartner and other Frenchmen attended. The American colony was present in great numbers, and it was a most enjoyable, and to me a [redacted] affecting, occasion. I made a farewell speech, [redacted] then was presented with a beautiful set of silver gilt candelabra and centerpiece by the Club. Previously, M. Faure had given me a superb book on Fontainebleau.

Saturday, March 1, 1952.

I went to dinner to-night at Preston Grover's, 23 rue de la Source, Passy, with Teddy White, David Schoenbrun and Harold Callender. We stayed up until about one o'clock in the morning talking over various political problems.
